Overview

Robert Mancher focuses his practice on complex legal matters involving construction and labor law, toxic torts, and general liability defense litigation. He is a keen and articulate litigator who ensures that his clients are well-served with zealous representation.

Most recently, Robert was a senior associate at a prominent New York City defense firm, where he represented numerous high-volume clients against toxic tort and asbestos claims. Robert has extensive litigation experience and has represented both plaintiffs and defendants over his legal career. He was an attorney at a New York City plaintiffs' firm, where he litigated various tort and personal injury cases from intake to trial. He previously represented doctors and hospitals at a New York City medical malpractice defense firm for over 10 years. During that time, he was lead counsel for the New York City comptroller's 50(h) contract, where he deposed hundreds of claimants bringing actions against the City of New York.

Robert graduated from Hofstra School of Law on academic scholarship. As a law student, he immersed himself in courses that challenged him to become a well-rounded lawyer and litigator. During his first summer as a law student, he went abroad for a sponsored course to Nice, France, to attend lectures given by former Chief Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg. He went on to complete the NITA Trial Techniques program to sharpen his skills as a litigator. Robert later used those skills to defend specialized doctors and hospitals from claims involving medical malpractice for birth defects, brain-damaged babies and failure to diagnose cancer.

While attending law school, Robert gained valuable experience at a Brooklyn hospital in the Risk Management Department, where he learned how to assess risk and respond to deficiencies through corrective action plans. Robert's wide-ranging experience and understanding in various settings gives him the tools and insight to tackle even the most complex issues in the constantly changing climate of the toxic tort industry.

Experience

+ Secured a summary judgement for a general contractor in Kings County Supreme Court in a premises liability case. Due to multiple layers of subcontractors on the job site, MG+M showed that our client did not cause or create the condition that caused the plaintiff's injuries, had no notice of the alleged defect, and did not owe the plaintiff a duty as they failed to meet the standard for any Espinal exceptions.
