Episode Description: Bernadette Catalana is one of seven children—six of them daughters. A lawyer, mentor, cooking enthusiast and avid yogi, she identifies most with the role of mother/nurturer. Raised in Endicott, New York, she raised her children in Rochester and eventually followed them to New York City, relocating her law practice and her life. Her recently published book, Daughter Lessons: Wise and Witty Reflections on Leading, Learning From, and Loving our Daughters, is a collection of essays written over the years, many of which were published on the Daughter Lessons website. Dedicated to her daughters personally, she has professionally focused on sending the ladder down and supporting other women in the profession. She has given a series of talks across the country called “Candid Talk Women,” designed to help women opt-in, rather than opt-out, of the practice of law.
